Objective:

The primary objective of the event was to create awareness about the importance of environmental conservation and encourage active participation from the students and faculty of the Department of Business Studies. By planting trees in their own localities, the participants aimed to contribute to the mitigation of climate change and promote green practices.

Planting Process:

Participants enthusiastically received their tree saplings and, following the guidelines provided, embarked on the planting process in their respective localities. The diversity of locations chosen for planting, ranging from urban settings to sub urban neighborhoods, added to the impact of the initiative. Participants shared images of their planted trees on social media platforms, fostering a sense of collective accomplishment.

Collaborative Efforts:

The success of the "One Student, One Tree" initiative was attributed to the collective efforts of both students and faculty members. Faculty coordinators not only ensured the smooth execution of the event but also set an example of environmental stewardship. The event exemplified the unity and responsibility of the university community towards ecological well-being.

Impact and Outreach:

The event generated a significant buzz within the university community and beyond. Social media posts with the hashtag #OneStudentOneTree gained traction, spreading the message of the initiative to a wider audience.
